"According to one definition, an enterprise is an organization of a commercial nature that has the status of a legal entity for commercial purposes: trade in goods, provision of services and performance of work, as well as production" [1]. The economic security of the regions and the country as a whole also depends on ensuring the economic security of the enterprise, since it is at the enterprise that added value is created and jobs are created, as well as the primary distribution of income between the owners of the enterprise, its employees, the state and the population as a whole.

The task of the state in maintaining the economic security of the enterprise is to ensure the safety of property at the legislative, executive and judicial levels. Including from the owner himself, since the state protects the interests of other participants too.

The creation of conditions responsible for economic security at the legislative level makes it possible to ensure maximum efficiency of production of economic activities and, accordingly, migration of tax revenues, which leads to the creation of jobs and an increase in the income of the employed. And also to maximize tax revenues in the future as a result of the company's activities in the present.

In the case when, while ensuring the economic security of an enterprise, the greatest emphasis is on the effective use of property, and not on its safety, the services responsible for this are those whose work is aimed at increasing the competitiveness of the entire enterprise, as well as the products and services produced by it. These departments include: finance department, planning and economic department, marketing and sales department, quality management department and so on.
