Nowadays we live in the rapidly developing world with a frequent introduction of new technologies, which entails the need for constant processing a large amount of information. Almost all relevant information materials for each field of activity are located on the Internet, where modern specialists are accustomed to looking for them. However, there is a problem of using modern sources of information: «80% of information is stored on English in electronic form around the world» [1]. It means that a future specialist should know foreign languages, especially English, in order to understand all the found information and translate it into the native language properly in order to avoid misinformation people, for example, in his reports. For this reason, a company executive's requirements for future specialists are expanding.

An ability to communicate fluency in foreign language opens horizons for young people, working in a certain company, for international cooperation and communication with foreign colleagues, clients and partners. In this case specialists have to work with filling out and signing agreements and preparation of relevant documents. To implement this actions future specialists should know a foreign language at a high level in order to understand a terminology, which uses in official documents, for example, to determine terms of the contract.

An information explosion that occurred in all spheres of human activity gave impetus to future specialists, which know a foreign language, to be an active participate of international and public organizations and to gain professional skills and improve them. A participation in this organizations can be useful in professional activity as it provides opportunity for future specialists to present theirs's scientific research and developments at international conferences and seminars. Introduction of future specialists to world knowledge and achievements in a particular field of activity will let them develop professional competencies and to be competitive on a modern mobile world market.

Knowledge of a foreign language for a future specialist enables negotiating with partners from different countries in order to achieve strategic goals of the company, in which the young man works. Besides working moments, a specialist after communicating with foreigners can find out social and cultural aspects of the country-partner, which «optimizes the achievement of general educational and educational goals, increasing the level of general culture of a future specialist» [2]. This also has a positive effect on formation communication skills of future specialists.

In conclusion, it should be said that in modern conditions are required qualified specialists, which are able to easily adapt to different changes, which are happening in the world, and which are able to understand quickly, how new equipment functions. Company executives are looking for responsible, mobile, highly erudite specialists, which fluent in their profession and foreign language at a high level, as «the real information world is inconceivable without specialists, who speak foreign languages, who can quickly extract information from foreign sources without an interpreter, present it in their native language and use it in scientific work» [3]. Therefore, knowledge of a foreign language and ability to apply this knowledge is extremely important for future specialists to be competitive on a modern world market.
